The screenshot shows the Firefox Add-on Manager interface. The browser window title is "Mozilla Firefox 開始頁" and the address bar shows "about:addons". The search bar contains "SettingSanity". The search results are filtered to "可用的附加元件" (Available Add-ons). The top result is "SettingSanity" with a green checkmark and a red box around the "立刻重新啟動" (Restart Now) button. The description of the add-on is "Re-adds the options to disable Images, JavaScript, and the Tab Bar in ab...". The date "2016年1月29日" is also visible.

Though Firefox has removed this particular option from its settings dialog box, probably because negligible number of users used that feature, we can still disable/enable javascript at will by venturing inside the hidden options and settings powerhouse on about:config page.. Lets see how we can disable javascript when needed in Firefox browser: Type about:config in Firefox address bar.. This is rather more geeky This method doesn’t bring back that option in Settings/options dialog box. Mmx353g 3g
